What is Personal Care

Personal care means making positive choices that enhance your physical, mental and spiritual health. This includes things like exercising, eating healthy, keeping sharp mentally and putting an end to unhealthy habits such as smoking. Personal care not only aids in maintaining overall health but can also help reduce workplace injuries.

It is important to emphasize all areas of personal care. Exercise programs that include resistance training (weight lifting) help build muscle and bone strength making you more resistant to injury. A combination of healthy eating and exercise will help your body heal if an injury does occur. Staying sharp mentally will help you to identify potential worksite hazards and make quick decisions. Finally, you should try to build and maintain a circle of trusted friends, family and acquaintances who will look out for you on and off the worksite.

Tips for personal care

- Being physically fit helps mental acuity. The exercise helps blood flow to the brain, and reduce stress.
- The brain can be exercised similar to a muscle. Learning new skills and performing challenging tasks helps exercise the brain.
- Alcohol is not the only substance that can inhibit judgement. Many prescription and over the counter drugs can slow decision making and reaction times. You should always check with a pharmacist and/or your supervisor if it is safe to work while using certain medications.
- Make personal goals for your well being. Take personal care because you want to, not because you need a new years resolution.

Personal Conduct

Personal conduct refers to how you behave and act in the workplace. Good personal conduct comes from being respectful, honest and being mindful of others. Your personal conduct shows who you are as a person, so it is beneficial for you to avoid negative workplace behaviours and maintain a happy respectful workplace.

Harassment

The Saskatchewan OHS Act defines harassment as conduct, comments, displays, actions or gestures that have a lasting, harmful effect on the worker. This includes things like yelling at others, swearing, starting rumors or any unwelcome physical contact.

Harassment can also be unintentional. Humor and jokes are good for worker morale but should not put anyone in harm’s way emotionally or physically. Things like shaking a co-workers ladder or shooting compressed air at him/her can result in serious injury. Remember not to take any unnecessary risks with the safety of others.

Other Tips for Personal Conduct

- Showing up on time gives the impression that you care about your job.
- Try to stay positive whenever possible. Your positive attitude will wear off on others making work more pleasant for everyone.
- Maintain a level-head when resolving conflict. If you lose control during an argument you may end up saying or doing something you will regret.
- Try to help others whenever possible. Your supervisors will notice your helpful attitude.
